VOLUME LXIX., NUMBER 32. REDWOOD CITY, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1928. ESTABLISHED IN 1859.

BOY INJURED AS TRUCK OVERTURNS

Frank Rodreguez of Redwood avenue met with a painful accident when a bread truck upon which he was riding figured in a wreck with a machine driven by Ed Hildebrandt of this city.

Hildebrandt was driving west on the Woodside road, according to witnesses to the accident, and was going to turn off to a polling place on the left hand side. As he turned, it is claimed that his door flew open, and the driver of the bread truck which was directly behind him, seeing the waving door mistook it for a signal that the car was going to turn to the right, and accordingly pulled to the left to avoid hitting the car ahead. When Hildebrant turned to the left the two machines crashed.

In the wreck the Hildebrandt machine was thrown against the Woodrow lunch stand. The bread truck was overturned and fell upon its side. As the bread truck fell the Rodreguez boy caught his arm under the truck and the heavy machine caused severe injuries to that member.

At the office of Dr. Clattenburg, where he was rushed for first aid treatment, it was found that the flesh had been pulled from the bone for a considerable distance and that the wound was filled with dirt and gravel. After a first aid dressing, the boy was sent to the community hospital.

Aside from the Rodreguez boy, the other occupants of the two cars escaped with minor injuries. The driver of the truck suffered a broken thumb. Both machines were badly damaged and the corner of the lunch stand was caved in as a result of the crash.

T. P. Maloney Called by Death

After an illness of several years which some time ago caused his retirement from active business, T. P. Maloney, well-known butcher of this city, passed away at his home at 86 Jefferson street at the age of 61 years.

Born in Ireland, Mr. Maloney came to this country when a young man and settled in Gilroy, where he followed the butcher trade. Later he went to Santa Clara. It was in the latter place that he married, and shortly after came to this city, where he opened a shop of his own in the Capitol Hotel, which then occupied the site of the Gardiner building. This he called the Capitol Market. At the time of the earthquake of 1906, when the Capitol Hotel was shaken down, he moved the market into its present location on the opposite side of the street.

In the new place the Capitol Market continued under the same management until obout 14 years ago when he sold it to H. Williams and retired. The business is now conducted by Harry Hallett.

But retirement did not suit a man as active in business at T. P. Maloney, and he engaged for awhile in ranching, and later returned to Redwood City, where he took an active interest in the Liberty Market on Main street, but later retired again due to ill health.

While the butcher business always held first place in his heart, Mr. Maloney's second interest was always dogs, and much of his time was spent in breeding fast greyhounds. In 1926 the world's Waterloo prize was won by one of his fast hounds.

The deceased is survived by his widow, Mrs. Eleanore Maloney and by three children, Walton T., and Lucille E. Maloney and Mrs. Helen Cullen. He was also the brother of Peter Maloney and Mrs. Helen Woods of San Francisco, Joseph Maloney of Ireland and the late John Maloney, Mrs. Kate Gerrity and Mrs. Stephen Maloney.

Funeral services will be held this morning at Mt. Carmel Catholic church, where a high mass will be celebrated. Interment will be in Holy Cross cemetery in Colma.

After hearing the testimony of Simonsen, Judge Mansfield held the case over for trial before Judge Geo. H. Buck in the superior court of this county.

Simonsen was arrested on Broadway near the postoffice after having been chased by the police car from the intersection of the highway with Whipple avenue.

REAL ESTATE FIRM ENDS PARTNERSHIP

The partnership of Charles G. Lambert and Dave L. Walter in the firm of Lambert & Walter, local realtors, was ended yesterday, when Lambert severed his connection with the firm. His interest was purchased by his former partner.

The firm has been in existence for the past decade and has become one of the leading realty firms of the county. A branch office is maintained in Wellesley Parkand another in Burlingame.

For the present the firm name will remain the same, it was stated yesterday. No announcement has been made by Lambert as to what his plans are. The personnel of the office, it is reported, will continue the same.

Warden Burke Gets Suspension

One of the surprises of the season was sprung this week upon the sportsmen of the county when the State Fish and Game Commission indefinitely suspended Jack Burke, for the past 14 years game warden of this county. The suspension of Burke was part of a general shake-up throughout the state by the Fish and Game Commission, which has transferred wardens from one part of the state to the other, made new appointments and issued suspensions.

The commission has appointed Mansefild Joy, formerly of San Francisco to succeed Burke in this county. McPherson Lough, formerly of Eureka, has been appointed to assist in this county. The new man is thoroughly familiar with local conditions and has made a number of arrests already.

The suspension of Warden Burke was a shock to his many friends in this county, as he was considered a capable and efficient officer. It is thought that Burke will be appointed to some other locality.

Peninsula Woman Has Goodwill Office

The Goodwill Industries of Northern California, with offices at 1027 Howard street, San Francisco, have apointed as their peninsula representative Mrs. T. F. Murphy of 1570 Cypress avenue, Burlingame. Arrangements have also been made to have a truck call at peninsula points on Monday of each week and pick up whatever cast-off clothing, magazines, books, furniture or other material the people of this section may have to give to this worthy cause.

The Goodwill Industries is a national organization which gives employment to aged and handicapped people, who are unable to secure a place in regular industries. These people are given a chance to earn a respectable living instead of having to rely on charity.

Materials that have been discarded are out of style, or that have served their day, are gathered from homes, offices, and places of business. This material is fumigated, cleaned, repaired, and put into presentable shape in the Goodwill workrooms.

Everyone who will save cast-off materias is furnished with a Goodwill bag. Waste materials, clothing, shoes, and other articles are collected through Goodwill bags placed in thousands of homes When filled the bags are called for by Goodwill trucks and brought to the Goodwill Shops. Here they are reconditioned by aged and handicapped men and women, who otherwise would become "human waste" as charity charges on the community. These salvaged articles are then sold to the needy at a very low cost, and the income is paid back in wages to the handicapped employees.

The Goodwill Industries is a non-sectarian, social service enterprise.

It helps others to help themselves in a self-respecting way without danger of pauperizing them.

It is a complete social program providing for the physical, social, intellectual, and spiritual welfare of its workers.

STILL BLAST KILLS COAST FARM HAND

An eyploding still resulted fatally for Reno Belluarnini yesterday at El Granada on the coastside of the county. The explosion took place in a building belonging to E. D. Van Slyke, a carpenter of El Granada, and attacted the neighbors who hurried to the scene of the blast to see what had occured. Arriving upon the scene neighbors found the body of Belluarnini scalded in the seething liquid he had been concocting.

Belluarnini was hurried to the Mills Memorial hospital in San Mateo, but was found to be dead upon arrival there as a result of the severe burns and from the force with which the brick work of the still firebox had been hurled against him.

From the hospital a call to the sheriff's office resulted in Deputies Quinlan and Maloney making an investigation of the blast. A large still was found in the frame building on the coastside badly demolished by the explosion which had killed Belluarnini. The two officers brought Van Slyke to the jail here and he was later given a hearing by the district attorney and released. Undersheriff Ed Farrell then left for the coastside and at a late hour last evening had not returned. Two trucks were dispatched with Deputy Sheriff Joe Meeks to bring the remains of the still to Redwood City

Belluarnini was well known on the coastside, where he had worked off and on as a farmhand on the ranches around Halfmoon Bay.

On two previous occasions, on October 11th and 22nd, Colombo was arrested on the same charge, and on those two occasions he paid fines aggregating $375. Colombo appeared yesterday before City Judge Mansfield on the third charge.

Prominent Lawyer Penniless in Court

George A. McGowan, the widely-known San Francisco attorney, was before Judge Buck yesterday and examined as to his assets. McGowan declared he had only $2 In his pockets, owned no real estate, had no cash in bank and no one owned him money, except a few clients, who were indebted to him for legal service for years.

McGowan has a judgment pending against him for $2500. He was once very wealthy. He was the step-father of Miss Milo Abercrombie, a noted beauty, who shortly before the World war, married Count Von Bricken. He was arrested as an alien enemy and sent for a term to McNeill's Island. During his incarceration his wife divorced him. Later she married Lieutenant Swanson of the United States Navy. To do this she had to have her first marraige declared invalid by the Rotary Court of Rome. That body held that her first marriage was invalid owing to the fact that Von Bricken was not baptized at the time of his marriage to the California beauty and therefore was not a Christian.

Some time ago she also divorced the navy man and is now living in San Mateo.

Milo Abercrombie and her sister, both of whom at one time resided at Woodside, were considered the prettiest women of California.

This action, he said, is in line with Governor Young's suggestion that public works be carried on as extensively as possible in helping to solve the unemployment problem.

California has voted to reapportion its representatives in the State Senate. The bond issue of $1,000,000 for the 1929 Olympiad in Los Angeles has carried, as has the $6,000,000 bond issue for acquisition of state parks. So has the measure relating to taxation of banks and intangible securities. Propositions to repeal the state boxing law and to abolish rodeos have been defeated.

French, state director of industrial relations. French cited 714 deaths, a decrease of 4.5 per cent for the year, and 1135 permanent injuries, an 8 per cent reduction. Temporary injuries lasting more than one day, totaled 90,538, a slight drop of 2-10 per cent.

The Selberling Rubber Company has acquired a 100 acre tract in Oakland and will start construction of a $3,000,000 plant within the next few weeks, it was announced last week. The tract is on Jones street south of the Southern Pacific Railroad tracks. About 500 people will be employed and 2500 tires daily will be the initial output.

Paid registration fees of motor vehicles in California for the first nine months of 1928 showed an increase of 63,399 cars over a similar period in 1927, Frank G. Snook, chief of the State Division of Motor Vehicles, announced a few days ago. The total for the nine months' period is 1,800,522, as compared with 1,736,795 for 1927.

California leads all states in number of aviators, the aeronautics branch of the Commerce Department announced a few days ago at Washington. It has 633 licensed pilots. New York ranks second with 347. The next eight are: Illinois, 216; Michigan, 194; Pennsylvania, 180; Ohio, 180; Texas, 176; District of Columbia, 162; Missouri, 150; Virginia, 105. These ten together have almost two-thirds of all the American aviators.

Governor C. C. Young at the meeting of the governor's council a few days ago requested that the division of motor vehicles supply information at the next meeting showing the causes of various automobile accidents occurring throughout the state. The governor asked for this information after a report of the division had been read, showing that in the first nine months of 1928 there were 1399 deaths, 5512 serious injuries and 14,232 minor injuries in automobile accidents in California.

While the ratio of state hospital patients to governing attendants and physicians is much higher in California than in either Massachussets or New York, it costs California less to care for her inmates, Earl E. Jensen, director of state institutions, told Governor C. C. Young recently. Jensen submitted a report showing that in Massachusetts the annual per capita cost is $368.32; New York, $397.96, and California, $249.14. The ratio of patients to attendants: California, 12.1; Massachusetts, 11.6; New York, 9. The ratio of patients to physicians: California, 312.2; New York, 180.7; Massachusetts, 151.96.

Thousands of visitors who invade California by the auto trail route each year hereafter will find border inspection stations comfortable stopping places, with courteous employes on hand to supply them with necessary information while other state agents make the necessary inspection of their baggage. Such is the plan advanced a few days ago by the state's cabinet of departmental executives. Comfortable stations of rustic design will be erected at the various interstate connections, it is proposed, with inspectors of the State Department of Agriculture and State Division of Motor Vehicles operating in the same building.

A new world's speed record for an airplane passenger carrier was declared to have been established last week, when a Western Air Express Fokker monoplane flew to Los Angeles from Oakland in two hours and six minutes. The flying distance was 365 miles. The ship averaged 177 miles an hour. The big tri-motored plane, carrying five passengers, left the Oakland Municipal Airport at 8:30 a. m. and landed at Los Angeles at 10:36 a. m. The air cruiser was speeded along by a fifty-two mile tail wind, according to Pilot Cy Morehouse.

Announcing a $8,551,276.39 gasoline tax assessment for the quarter ending September 30, the State Board of Equalization predicted recently that total gasoline tax collections for 1928 will exceed $32,425,000. The statement showed that gasoline taxes levied for the first nine months of the year amount to $24,486,404.93. The levy for July, August and September was based upon distribution of 287,921,761.9 gallons of motor vehicle fuel, as compared with 273,753,669.6 gallons for the corresponding period in 1927. The announced gain is 5.17 per cent.

With the total of 14,747 deer already reported killed during the season that closed on October 15, it is expected the number brought down by the hunters' guns will exceed 19,000 when all figures are assembled, Fred G. Stevenot, head of the state department of natural resources, said last week. Stevenot declared deer are plentiful in California and are increasing in number.

Labor law amendments under which the eight hour working day for women would be made to apply to all female state employes are to be introduced at the January session of the Legislature. Will J. French, state director of industrial relations, so advised Governor Young and his cabinet last week, declaring that private interests are now making investigations looking toward introduction of the measure.

Those dull black plates with glossy orange numerals which every well and legally dressed California motorcar will wear in 1929 will be available at all division of motor vehicle agencies December 15. Bigger and better license plates and more of 'em is the division's slogan, Division Chief Frank G. Snook announced recently as he prepared to exchange 2,000,000 of the tin receipts for each payment. The plates will be larger than the present issue, and similar to those now used by New York State. They will bear serial letters as a means of reducing the present seven-numbered series and permit larger and more legible numbers.

Los Angeles and Catalina Island have been connected with the only amphibian air passenger service operated in the world, according to a report from Western Air Express, Inc. The plane leaves from the ground at Vail field, Los Angeles, and lands on the water of Avalon bay. Returning, it starts from the water and lands on the ground. The plane, which carries eight passengers, is equipped with both wheels and pontoons. It is operated with two motors and has a speed of 120 miles an hour. It takes 25 minutes for the flight from Los Angeles to Catalina.

With courts co-operating in commitment of "dope" victims, the number of patients at the new State Narcotic Hospital has increased from ten to thirty-five during the last month, Earl E. Jensen, director of institutions, reported to Governor Young recently. Facilities are now available for only 150 additional patients, Jensen said. Several persons sent to the institution have escaped, however, he reported, and judges will be asked to exercise discretion in future commitments of narcotic addicts who are also desperate criminals.

California remains the motoring ground of the nation. The division of motor vehicles revealed recently that an actual count taken at its six border stations during two months of the tourist season now passing showed a total of 68,286 out-of-state cars passed into California during this period. Taking an average of three persons to a car would give a total of 204,753 persons who visited the Golden State during this short period. Assuming that the occupants of each car spent $100 while in California—an average regarded as extremely low by state officials—there would be a sum in excess of $680,000 left in California by these visitors.

A far reaching extension of California's facilities for fire prevention and suppression is included in the 1929-1930 budget of the state forestry system, it was announced a few days ago by Fred G. Stevenot, director of the state department of natural resources. Among the enlargements planned under the new $650,060 budget, now pending before the state department of finance, are an increase in the number of rangers, both all year and seasonal; an additional forestry inspector, more lookouts in strategic fire zones, more assistant rangers during the fire season, the acquisition of more fire fighting equipment and the founding of a revolving fund to permit employment of special fire workers in emergencies.

The worth of a human life in California was placed at $4000 recently by Dr. Walter M. Dickie, state director of public health. While this quotation may shock the egotism of some Californians, Dickie points out that this figure is more than one-third in excess of the national estimate. Economists have set the value of a human being to the social and economic structure of the nation at $2900. L. E. Ross, statistician for the state department of public health believes that figure is too cheap and says that the prospective earnings of a Californian reaches a maximum of $5000 at the age of 26 years. After 60, says Ross, the individual becomes an average liability.

The legislative reapportionment act, approved by the voters on the face of available election returns will not affect representation in the State Legislature this winter, according to conclusions drawn from a legal opinion handed down in February, 1927, by Attorney-General U. S. Webb. The opinion, dealing with various reapportionment possibilities, was rendered in response to questions by State Senator Newton M. Allen of Los Angeles following favorable vote of the people on a constitutional amendment authorizing the new redistricting program.

The largest telescope in the world, planned to surpass by five or ten times the power of the great Hooker telescope on Mount Wilson, is to be erected on a California mountain top not yet designated. The California Institute of Technology has announced that funds have been made available for its construction and that work on the 200-inch reflector with which it will be equipped will begin within a few months. The telescope and a laboratory are a gift to the Institute from the International Education Board, with headquarters at New York.

Boosting and Boosters

"There ain't nothin' livin' in the woods what can make more fuss than a blue jay—an' there ain't nothin' that anybody ever heard tell a blue jay was good for—'cept to trim wimmen's bonnets, maybe."—Preachin' Bill.

YES, of course, one should always put one's best foot foremost. At the same time, when one essays a good long step ahead, one should be reasonably sure that one's hind foot is not stuck fast in the mud.

But speaking of boosters: There are several varieties of the genius hot-airacus.

One of the most common is the kind that perches on the corral fence and flaps its wings and crows from sunup till sundown. Nobody knows exactly what all the commotion is about; nobody cares, except that it is annoying. We suspect that somebody has laid an egg or something, but we are dead sure that the bird making all the noise didn't. Perhaps some neighboring rooster may have remarked that their corral is larger than ours. Indeed, the noisy one, himself, doesn't appear to know exactly the reason for his excitement. He seems to have started his mouth to talking and then gone away and left it.

The most detestable of the boosting breed are the professionals. They are enthusiasm prostitutes selling themselves to every stranger who is unwise enough to fall for their charms.

One of these creatures lands in a community just before noon—in time to get himself invited to the Rotary, Kiwanis, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday club luncheon; and before the chamber of commerce banquet that evening he has sold the town to itself. In its delirium the town expresses its gratitude to the booster by delivering itself without reservation into his hands.

When the dust has settled the professional is well on his way to fresh fields. The citizens sober up to find themselves exactly where they were before, minus the expense of their boosting debauch.

Very different is the good citizen who honestly believes that his hometown has peculiar advantages, who sincerely loves his neighbors because he thinks they are the finest people in the world, and who, out of a full heart, wants others to share the community blessings which he so enjoys.

Such a booster is a delight and a simon pure asset to any community—providing—oh yes, providing, our boosting friend does not permit every butcher and baker and candlestick maker to use him and his unselfish enthusiasm to boost their individual and wholly selfish interests.

Many a wily old town spider sits back out of sight and unostentatiously urges these community interest heroes on, while it never occurs to the loyal boosters that all they are doing is to boost silly flies into the spider's carefully spread net.

The slogan of the booster: "Put up your hammer and get a horn," aptly epitomizes the down-to-date philosophy of boosting. It seems never to have occurred to these vociferating pests that the hammer is mainly a tool for building and that horns are mostly toys with which thoughtless and irresponsible children make a distracting racket.

Suppose we think a few thinks and see if we do not find that all glittering talk is not golden; and that, in fact, golden talk very seldom glitters.

Oratory often goes "blah" for the simple reason that it is "blah." Talk is disgustingly cheap when there is nothing to back it. I have never heard that a barnyard full of cackles ever raised the price of eggs.

Between you and me, many a high-chested rooster who can crow right lustily at a chamber of commerce banquet, contributes next to nothing toward the community omelette.

And the only argument ever advanced for all this extravagant and ridiculous community boosting is that there is money in it for everybody.

I agree that there may be money in it for some. But I contend if the money spent annually by the average boosting community for that type of boosting which convinces only credulous fools, were spent in substantial and genuine community improvements, the harvest would be abundant for all.

True, the harvest might not be in actual dollars that could be deposited in a bank. But there are community interests you know, which, while not directly bankable, are beyond price.

No, I am not so impractical as to ignore the universal need of bankable dollars. Bankable dollars are a great comfort—I wish I could make myself more comfortable!

The Teacher says, "The love of money is the root of all evil." It is just as true that a desire for money may be rooted in a sincere purpose to accomplish a great good.

But those mistaken saints who hold that we ought not to think of money, need not worry. We don't think about it, and therein lies two-thirds of our financial troubles. If we could only be persuaded to really think about money, money would not worry us much.

Money is of value not because it is money, but because it stands for all that is dearest and best in life. That it stands also for all that is debasing and damning makes no difference.

And so the great question of the age is not what you are, but what is your income? The great problem of life is not why are we here, but how can we manage to stay here? The great fear of our existence is not fear of death, but fear of notice from the bank that we have overdrawn. The fight to pay our bills, and the dread of the deadly deficit—these are the nightmares that keep us awake.

> The red-ink tragedy is a very real tragedy—a tragedy in which most of us at one time or another have been forced to play a part. But chin music alone will never draw a large flock of dollars to your box office.

Too often we study our financial problems from the one standpoint of how to get money. At this date it appears that the shortest way out of our difficulties is to learn how to spend the money we do get. If a restaurant keeper were to invest all his capital in flowers to decorate his tables, his bill of fare would not attract a hungry crowd with cash to spend.

> Most of us who go broke get that way by spending not wisely but too well.

Certainly, I know the old saying: "Doing business without advertising is like winking at your girl in the dark. You may know what you are doing but no one else will."

But advertising is not simply making any old thing sound attractive. Those leaders who rank high in business intelligence discovered long ago that the advertising which is 90 per cent lie is less than 10 per cent effective.

The salesman who is long on gab and short on truth loses more business than he gains. The selling talk that is based on a policy of hit-and-run rarely scores a second time on the same customer. The hook that is baited with guff lands only minnows. The fish are only attracted by more substantial bait. No hunter ever yet bagged big game with a blow-gun.

Once, when I was a boy, I worked in a store. And the boss explained to me that any fool could sell a customer something the customer wanted, but that it took a salesman to sell a person something the person did not want.

I am older now. And my years of painfully acquired experience, together with a habit of observation, have taught me that the one who sells a person that which the person does not want is the real fool.

In my young man days I had a friend who had a curious complex. He would rather acquire a silver dollar for which he gave nothing, than to gain a five dollar bill for which he had rendered five dollars' worth of service. He seemed to feel that to give nothing for something was a mark of superior intelligence. He was never so happy and proud as when he had just, as he said, "gypped" somebody.

Well, I have watched that man's progress through all the best years of his life and I never knew the time when he was not dependent, in one way or another, upon friends or relatives. He is practically a beggar today, existing on charity. No one will trust him for a meal. He is forced to sponge even his cigarettes. All of which would be torture to a self-respecting person; but, of course, self-respect long ago ceased to count for anything to this miserable failure.

And this man was the most convincing booster I ever heard. To him boosting was a fine art. He could, would, and did boost anything for anybody, at any time.

Of course it was often best for him to be somewhere else when the sticks of his skyrockets began to come down!

> All his life, you see, this man has tried to do business on the plan of talking people into giving something for nothing. In the end he has for all his efforts—nothing.

Some say that a knock is a boost. Perhaps—But I am still of the opinion that if we could knock some of these reckless, unprincipled, shameless nineteen twenty-eight variety of boosters dead, we would all do a better business.

POULTRY FACTS

RAISING GUINEAS NOT DIFFICULT

I've been raising guineas a number of years and have often wondered why they are not more plentiful on general farms, as they can be raised in connection with turkeys or chickens with very little extra labor, writes M. G. Roberts in Farm and Ranch.

Guinea is served on the tables of American hotels under various names, as it is the best substitute for game of any of our domestic poultry. The meat has a distinct game flavor quite different from chicken or turkey.

There are three varieties of guineas raised in America, the Pearl, the White, and the Lavender. I have raised both the White and Pearl varieties, but found little difference between them, although the Pearl might be just a little hardier and easier to raise.

These birds are great layers. Although their eggs are not quite so large as hen eggs, they are of a richer flavor. They begin laying early in the spring, sometimes in March, and lay until cold weather if not allowed to set. The first pair of guineas I bought, the hens laid 80 eggs. That I got the first season, and set and raised a brood of young ones, and this excels the average chicken hen.

These fowls cannot be confined in small yards and do much good, but if given their liberty on general farms will pick up most of their living.

They do not damage planted fields or crops as do turkeys or chickens, as they never scratch, but they will destroy more insects than any other fowl, and never stay away from home.

They are always on the lookout for any strange animal or bird, and their sharp eyes will detect the presence of a hawk long before chickens will notice it, and their shrill cries always give warning of any intruder. This fact should make them a welcome addition to general farmers where other poultry is raised, if they had no other good qualities.

Any little disturbance in the night sets them to cackling, and therefore chicken thieves usually give a wide berth to the flock housed with guineas.

Guinea eggs hatch in from 25 to 28 days, and usually all hatch at about the same time. They are remarkably fertile and almost every egg set will produce a guinea chick. They do better when set under chicken hens, as they can usually be given better care. The guinea hen will sit and hatch well, but as soon as the first ones hatched are able to travel she will often leave the nest and the balance of her eggs.

Hens Will Appreciate Clean Winter Quarters

"Clean house now," is the advice of A. C. Smith, chief of the poultry division, University of Minnesota, to poultry keepers of the state who hope to make winter egg production profitable. Here is his recipe for cleaning the hen house:

"Brush down the ceiling and walls, and get all the dust and cobwebs out of the building. Take out all the movable fittings, including nests, nesting material, roosting platforms, waterstands, and feeders, and clean thoroughly. Sun and air them for a few days if possible, and then spray with a combined disinfectant and insecticide. Burn all nesting material and floor litter.

"If your floors are of sand or gravel—if properly constructed, you cannot have better—remove as much of the top as has become discolored and replace at once with new, clean, fresh gravel or sand. Spray the entire wall space as well as the fittings."

Typhoid Contagious

Fowl typhoid is highly contagious. It can be carried by surface washings of the soil, by English sparrows, dogs and humans. A good cleanup is the best war measure against this disease, using the plow or spade on yards, with slaked lime, and scrubbing and disinfecting the house. Sick birds should be killed promptly and burned, and the healthy birds moved to fresh ground. Give epsom salts, a pound to 100 birds.

Poultry Plans

Many people have found the budget very helpful in keeping their household accounts in shape but they have not yet adopted the same principle in their poultry business. One of the troubles with the way poultry is kept on most farms is too little planning of the work. Many people do not know how many chickens they are going to hatch or buy, what feeds they are going to use, how large a flock they want for the winter or how the birds are to be handled or marketed.

Oat Sprouter

An easily built oat sprouter may be constructed by making an upright frame 7 feet high and about 2 feet wide and 2 feet deep. Seven trays, one for each day in the week, are made to fit into the frame. The outfit may be left in any warm room. If desired, the frame may be covered, and a lamp placed in the bottom to furnish heat. When a tray is emptied, a new supply of oats is immediately placed on it, so that one tray is ready for each day of feeding.

Capons for Market

Capons are easier to fit for market than roosters, are larger and of better quality, and will bring a higher price on the market. Most cockerels will be a pound or pound and a half in weight, a very good age for performing the operation. The main thing to keep in mind is that the birds should be starved 36 hours prior to operation, and proper tools should be used. A few lessons and the average poultryman will be able to perform the operation without danger.

New Dam-Building Idea

Apropos of some recent failures of dam construction for storage and power purposes, something new in this line is being tried out in France. The new dam to be built at Marege, in the Haute-Dordogne, is to have five thin curved shells of reinforced concrete placed one behind the other and each shell lower than the one directly back of it. In this way the desired head of water will be obtained in five stages. The idea is that when the reservoir is filled, the water in the intervening spaces will help to support the walls. Incidentally, this construction is said to result in an economy of about 25 per cent in building material alone.

Something New in World History

IF Solomon were living today he would have to rewrite his proverb "There is nothing new under the sun." From the A of Aeroplane to the Z of Zerolene all adown the alphabet are listed the novelties of the 19th and 20th centuries. This very week was added to that long list another novelty, of the most striking character, that may have the utmost effect in the shaping of human destinies.

It certainly should have world significance that the most powerful nation on earth, the United States of America, has selected a member of the Society of Friends to be the Commander in Chief of its Naval and Miltary Forces. That Society, in its membership, embraces the entire world; and, as every one knows, exists to spread a gospel of real, literal Peace on Earth. Its votaries have often been abused, maltreated and suffered hardship and imprisonment for voicing persistently their abhorrence of war and all other inhumanities and for their refusal to participate in War's wholesale massacre and destruction.

This new U. S. A. Commander in Chief, Herbert C. Hoover, has already declared his devotion to the Coolidge policies, emphasized thus by that gentleman: "It is for the generation which saw and survived the World War to devise measures of prevention." To this end his Secretary of State obtained the adhesion of all nations to his "Pact of Paris," outlawing war.

Will our new commander in chief use his extraordinary, proved ability to make this pact effective, by arranging that universal disarmament that the common sense of all approves, for which all peoples of the earth long and devoutly pray for; and which might easily be theirs were their statesmen wise!

—EDWARD BERWICK
Pacific Grove, California.

Wisdom and Statesmanship

THE good will trip planned by Herbert Hoover, president-elect, to the Southern Republics will result in much good to the United States. It will cement the friendships of the countries, create a better understanding and feeling to the end that business relations will be cordial and that the United States will receive a volume of trade.

Mr. Hoover has shown wisdom and good statesmanship in planning the trip. Good results will follow. Then too, he will be informed about the affairs of the republics and be in a position to act intelligently should the necessity arise for him, while president, to aid the countries to the south in their difficulties.

As we predicted during the campaign Mr. Hoover will give the country a wise administration and he is showing this wisdom in planning this trip.

HOME..... or just a house?

PRIMITIVE man no doubt called his shelter "home," be it cave or roof of boughs. Today, though, home means so much more than just a house—telephone, radio, hot and cold water and electric lights with convenient outlets, and all those modern conveniences which make for healthful, comfortable living.

Your friends will tell you that EXTENSION TELEPHONES save steps and time and increase the comfort of living far more than the trifling cost involved.

Just call our Business Office and say, "I want an extension telephone."

WOODSIDE

Rev. Benjamin St. John was called to Sacramento last week because of a serious accident suffered by his son at the field of the Sacramento airport. The younger St. John is an engineer for the Standard Oil Co. and an experienced aviator who flies his own plane in business trips about the state. The accident occured as he was waking across the field after landing. He was struck in the side by the wing of another alighting plane, resulting in the rupture of the liver. An operation was performed and up to the present time the indications have seemed favorable for his recovery.

Armistice Day services were held at the church notwithstanding the absence of Rev. St. John, the service being conducted by members of the congregation, according to an outline suggested by the pastor.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Pond and their daughter, Miss Barbara, left their home here this week and will spend the winter months in San Franisco.

The last regular meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association, prior to the bazaar for which the members have been preparing, was held on Wednesday. A card party will be given by the Association on the evening of November 23, and will be in charge of Mr. and Mrs. James V. Neuman.

Miss Vera Weeks, formerly a resident of Woodside, and a pupil at the local school, was married on Wednesday evening at Stanford Memorial Chapel, to Frederick H. Newcomb.

Tony Zaepfel and family spent the last week-end at Carmel.

Hungary Linked By Telephone Cable

Telephone service between Hungary and the United States was inaugurated Monday, November 12 at 10:30 a. m. by two conversations between officials of the two governments, according to the announcement made today by The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The first conversation was between President Count Bethlen in Budapest and Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State in Washington. The second was between the American minister to Hungary, J. Butler Wright, in Budapest, and the Hungarian minister in Washington, Count S. Z. Echenyi.

With the addition of the capital of Hungary to the cities to which transatlantic service is already available Hungary will be the fifteenth European nation to be brought within speaking range of America. Budapest brings 50,000 additional telephones serving nearly a million people to be interconnected with the 26,000,000 in Europe and America already linked by transatlantic service. A total population of about 268,000,000 is served by the telephone included in this net-work.

Hungary is the second of the independent states created from the former Austrian Empire to be included in transatlantic telephone service extensions. The first was Austria which was brought within reach of American telephone users last week when Vienna telephones were linked to the transatlantic circuit.

Mrs. Albert Mansfield and family returned Sunday from Los Angeles, where she has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Harland Mansfield and family.

Oakland—Construction of fifth hangar at Oakland airport will begin shortly.

Council In Session

The town council held a special meeting Tuesday evening to hear the discussion of property owners in Stanford Park as to the improvement of streets in that locality. There was a big attendance of property owners present, all of whom discussed at length the proposed street work. Engineer Kneese was present and in a lengthy address explained the character of the material to be used and the legal methods to be pursued. He urged grading from property line to property line, cement concrete sidewalks, concrete curbs and gutters,lateral or house sewers, three inch asphaltic concrete wearing surface laid on a four inch water bound macadam base pavement and the caring for the necessary storm water sewer. He said that this would cost between six and one half and seven dollars a front foot. He urged this type of improvement. Mr. Kneese answered many questions put to him by the property owners with satisfaction to all. Several in that section declared that a few of the streets were in good condition and did not need repairing at this time. Mr. Kneese said that these could be passed for the present, but urged that while the work was being done that it would be unwise to overlook any street in that section as the work would have to be done sooner or later, and that it would be an advantage to have the whole locality under a uniform system. However, this matter was left to the property owners. After a thorough and intelligent discussion of the whole matter of street work, the board adjourned to meet later for a further hearing. Should the contemplated work be agreed upon activities will not be begun until next spring.

Statue Dedicated

A valuable statue of Saint Aloysius, Louis Gonzago, was unveiled and dedicated to the memory of Mark A McCann, who died a few months ago. The statute was presented to the Church of the Nativity by Mrs. M. A. McCann, in memory of her son. The dedicatory ceremony was performed at the 10:30 o'clock mass last Sunday. Father Morpen of Santa Clara preached the sermon depicting the life and dwelling upon the virtues of the saint, who died in 1591. Saint Aloysius was a patron of youth, his virtue and purity could be well followed by the youth of today. The statue is located on the left hand side of the altar. It will stand for all time, an inspiration for the young men of the congregation.

At the evening service Mr. Bone will speak on the mission work of the Presbyterian denomination.

In the evening a snappy little play "Sewing for the Heathen," will be put on by members of the Ladies' Auxiliary. Several musical numbers will add to the interesting free program. YOU CAN'T DEPEND ON THE WEATHER

USE ICE ALL WINTER

To Keep Food Wholesome

If you lived in the East, where winter means freezing weather for weeks at a time, you might—by keeping your refrigerator out-of-doors—get along for the next few months without ice. But not in California—with its mild winter weather—its rapid temperature changes.

For it is these very changes that make food spoil quickly. To keep it fresh and wholesome, it must be kept constantly cold. That means kept with ice.

Your food costs more in winter than in summer. The ice that keeps it pure and healthful saves more.

Use Ice this Winter because--

[1] Most homes are kept warmer in winter than in summer.

Use Ice this Winter because--

[2] A cooler, open to the dust, is never a safe place to keep food.

Use Ice this Winter because--

[3] Coldness alone is not enough to keep foods fresh. They need the moist, circulating air of a refrigerator.

Use Ice this Winter because--

[4] Weather records for the past 5 years show that a typical California city had only 9 days when the winter temperature was lower than that of a well iced refrigerator all day.

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

The RED LAMP

THE STORY

Events of the story as set forth in the journal of William A. Porter, professor of English literature:

The professor's uncle, Horace Porter, died mysteriously at his home, Twin Hollows, now the professor's property. Jane, the professor's wife, is a psychic. With their niece, Edith, the Porters go to Twin Hollows for their vacation, despite Jane's reluctance. A letter Horace had been writing at the time of his death shows that he was interested in spiritualism. It hints of danger. A "red lamp" is mentioned. They take up their residence in the lodge, because of Jane's aversion to the house. Warren Halliday, in love with Edith, comes to live in the boathouse. A number of sheep are mysteriously killed in the vicinity. The slayer leaves a cabalistic sign at the scene of the killings. Greenough, a detective, arrives and Porter has a feeling that he is under suspicion. Twin Hollows is rented to an elderly, partially paralyzed man, Bethel, who, with his secretary, Gordon, takes possession. A youth, Carroway, on watch for the sheep killer, disappears. Porter has the red lamp hidden in a room of which he alone has the key, but many people, including the professor himself, believe they have seen its reflection at Twin Hollows. Halliday is mysteriously attacked and seriously injured. Carroway is found in the bay, murdered. Mary Morrison, Porter's cook, disappears.

"If you amateurs would keep out," he grumbled, "we would get somewhere with this case. Some day one of you is going to be missing, and I'll have more trouble on my hands."

From which one may gather that Mr. Greenough feels that we are not through with the situation.

Halliday and Edith have taken the car and gone out this evening. Jane is very uneasy, but I feel that they will be safe enough.

The best time to travel is immediately after a railroad accident.

July 25

And now where are we?

We can no longer doubt that the same hand which throttled Carroway and attacked Halliday, has brought about the disappearance and almost certain murder of Maggie Morrison.

Halliday knows it. Edith knows it I know it. But what use are we to make of our knowledge? What effect, for instance, will it have on my own serio-comic position? Could Greenough arrest me on suspicion? Although Halliday laughs at that, he is I think, a trifle uncertain. He feels as I do, that before long Greenough will have to satisfy the public by an arrest of some sort, and that I am the only person against whom he has the shadow of a case.

What developed last night is as follows: Halliday got out of the car at the spot where the truck was found, and had Edith go back and approach slowly, along the road from town. Approximately, the conditions were the same as those of the night of the disappearance, save that no rain was falling.

Halliday, it appears, was searching for that spot, back among the trees, where the unknown had waited, secure from observation but still able to see the truck's lights far enough away to be able to run out and hail it before it had passed.

After two or three experiments he found the proper location, and there commenced a sort of intensive search with the pocket flash, with Edith in the car, to warn him of any approach and the lights out.

Not under the tree he had selected, but perhaps a dozen feet away from it, he found, well trampled into the ground, a small screw cap, made of tin; exactly similar, he tells me, to those used on the cans of certain makes of ether, and underneath which there is a cork.

"In my case, he was unlucky," he explains. "He went through the same procedure, and took the cap off before he hailed me, but the cork came out. He had better luck this last time."

As to his discovery of the murderer's infernal symbol, he is more reticent. He had some sort of a "hunch" to examine the trees themselves, he says simply.

"You thought there might be something on a tree?"

"I don't know that I thought about it at all, Skipper. I just turned the flash up, and there it was."

Perhaps I am wrong, but his explanation does not quite satisfy me, nor, I think does it satisfy himself. With all his keen intelligence he is strictly conventional; I think he believes it would somehow invalidate his manhood to confess that his "hunch" might have been a guidance by some unseen source.

But the triangle enclosed in a circle was there, on a tree only thirty feet back from the road.

July 26.

Annie Cochran says absolutely that there is neither a red lamp nor a red lantern in the other house.

I stopped her this morning and asked her.

The day has brought no developments in the Morrison case, which has settled down more or less into a routine. The searchers are fewer each day; the fishermen have gone back to their nets and trawls, and today will probably see the last of the attempts to drag likely spots on the bay.

There are many now who believe that this time the anchor rope is shorter, and that the body, securely anchored to the ooze at the bottom of the bay, will not be uncovered by the lowest tide.

But if the day has brought no developments outside, it has brought one or two to us here.

For one thing, the morning mail returned to me through the dead-letter office my letter of thanks to the young woman in Salem, Ohio, an event which would puzzle me more, did I not suspect the lady of using a fictitious name, for all her apparent frankness.

For another, Jane has at last unbosomed herself. She maintains that on the night of the nineteenth she saw Maggie Morrison clairvoyantly. Rather on the morning of the twentieth, for granted that she has actually had another of her curious psychic experiences, there is a discrepancy in time here as marked as the interval between Uncle Horace's death and her vision of him lying on the library door.

Maggie Morrison disappeared presumably at eleven o'clock the night of the 19th; Jane's vision occurred at three the morning of the 20th, or four hours later.

This morning, at eleven o'clock Jane left the cottage for the first time in days, giving as an excuse that she meant to look over Warren Halliday's clothing and bring back such as required mending.

When an hour had gone by and she had not returned, I began to grow uneasy. Halliday, I knew, was out on the bay, and in such times as these any small deviation from the normal is upsetting. I started after her; therefore, and was startled not to find her in the living quarters or on the veranda. But when I called she answered from below, and going down I found her among the boats.

"Well!" I said. "And are you going fishing?"

"I was just wandering about," she said. "There's another boat, isn't there?"

"Halliday's out in it. Why?"

But she pretended not to hear me and went up the steps again. Even then she made various excuses not to leave at once. She went inside, and I could hear her straightening the small living room. When there was nothing more to do she came out again.

"I don't think he has cooked a thing since it happened," she said. "Suppose we wait for him, and take him back to luncheon?"

She is no actress, is Jane, and it began to dawn on me that she was determined to wait for Halliday's return, and that she had one of her hidden reasons for it. It was there, sitting on the boathouse veranda, that she finally told her story, which is detailed in the extreme.

"You remember," she said, "the night of Maggie's disappearance, that a storm was threatening, and that I was nervous. I felt queer—I can't describe it, William. I had a sort of premonition, I think, anyhow. I didn't want to go to bed. Once in awhile something terrifies me, and I am afraid even to wink for fear something happens while my eyes are closed. It was like that.

"Edith was writing something or other, shut in her room, and after you had gone the storm began to come up and I felt queer and jumpy. I went around the windows downstairs, and then went into the living room and sat down to wait for you."

"Let's see. What time was that?"

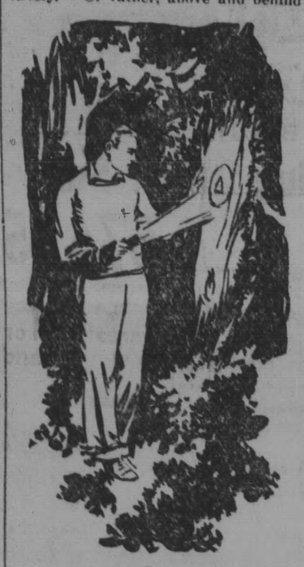
"It must have been ten o'clock; maybe a little later. Then—I hate to tell you this, William. It sounds so silly."

"I've been thinking some pretty foolish things myself, lately, my dear," I said, gravely. "Go ahead."

"Jock was very strange, from the moment we went in there. He sat and stared at that old parlor organ. I—"

"At the parlor organ! What in the world—"

"At the parlor organ," she said positively. "Or rather, above and behind



"I Just Turned the Flash Up and There It Was."

it, where it sits across the corner. And after a while, I thought I saw something there."

"What sort of 'something'?"

"I can't tell you," she said, and shivered. "That is, it wasn't really anything. It was like a mist. I could just tell there was something there, and then Jock lifted up his head and bowled at it, and—I don't even remember getting upstairs, William."

It is the remainder of Jane's story which seems worthy of consideration in view of her previous average of hits.

She went to sleep, sinking fathoms deep into unconsciousness, but at three o'clock she wakened, suddenly and fully, and sat up in her bed. But she was not in a bed at all. She was in a boat, and Maggie Morrison also was in it, lying at her feet. After a time—she has no idea how long—the vision faded, and she was still sitting up in her bed.

Such details as I can draw from her are as follows:

"Did you see Uncle Horace in the same way?"

"Wakening out of a sleep? Yes."

"Was there the same sort of light?"

"Not a light exactly. It doesn't come from anywhere. I can't describe it exactly; the things I see are luminous."

She saw no rope on the body or in the boat, and there was no sign of injury on the girl.

"She looked very peaceful," says Jane, and sets me to shuddering.

On one point, however, she is entirely definite. She maintains that there were pieces of cloth tied around the oarlocks of the boat. "White cloth," she adds, as an afterthought.

"Why cloth?"

"To keep the oars from making a noise," says my Jane, who has been in a rowboat perhaps a half dozen times in all her life!

We sat on the veranda while Halliday came in with the boat; he had been out, I daresay, on some scouting business of his own, and I confess to a sort of terror that by some unlucky chance we might find the oarlocks of this very boat, wrapped with white cloth, "to keep the oars from making a noise." But they showed no stigma of crime.

"Why," I said to Jane, as Halliday tied his boat and came with his spoiled stride up the runway, "why did you come down here to look at our boats, my dear?"

She showed a faint distress.

"I don't know, William. I just had a feeling that I had to come."

I have not asked her why she has suppressed this experience for so long. For she no more doubts that Maggie Morrison was killed and thrown into the sea from a boat with muffled oarlocks, than she doubts her own existence. But coupled with that certainty has been her dread of possible publicity, and that ever present feeling of hers that whatever power she has is somehow shameful.

My poor Jane.

July 27.

The blow has fallen again, and this time almost at our very door. That it is not murder is not due to any lack of intention, but to weakness in execution. I have spent a large portion of the day in urging Edith and Jane to go back to town, but without result.

"Not unless you go," Jane said firmly, and Edith and I exchanged glances.

As a matter of fact, last night's events have left me in a more precarious position than before, and I feel that any more on my part would only precipitate matters. Greenough has given out a statement to the reporters that an early arrest may be expected, and I do not for the life of me understand why he has not pounced already.

I imagine the only thing that has saved me, so far, has been the single fact that Peter Geiss knows I was on the sloop the night and hour when Halliday was attacked. That puzzles him.

To record last night's strange affair in sequence:

I could not sleep, a condition which is growing chronic with me lately, and at or about midnight I went down stairs and outside. The night was extremely dark; I paced back and forward along the drive, keeping at first close to the Lodge, but gradually extending my steps as I grew accustomed to the darkness.

After twenty minutes or so of this, and at the extreme of my swing toward the other house, I heard some sort of movement in that direction and stopped to listen. It was a cautious disturbance of the shrubbery, and I swung in among the trees and stood listening. It was not repeated, however, and I turned to go back.

I had, however, lost my way, and for some brief time I floundered about. At last I found the sun-dial, by striking against it, and thus orienting myself, turned about and struck back toward the Lodge.

I had not gone ten feet before I heard the bell ringing.

(Note: A large bell on the kitchen porch of the main house and used in times before the telephone was installed, to summon the gardener. It is rung by pulling a rope attached to it.)

It rang sharply twice and then abruptly stopped, and the sudden silence seemed somehow ominous, like the stillness after a shriek.

There were no lights in the main house, and no further sounds came from it. I daresay at such times one does not think; one acts automatically. I do not recall thinking at all, but I do recall trying to feel my way through the trees, and that I ran into one and was partially stunned for an instant.

The house was still completely dark and silent. I felt my way with more caution, skirted the shrubbery, and at last found the railing leading up the steps to the kitchen. Here I was on safer ground, and I crossed the small porch to the door with increasd confidence, only to stumble over something and almost fall. I knew at once what it was, and I felt suddenly ill although my brain was as active as ever in my life. But I found some matches in my dressing-gown pocket, and striking one bent over a figure lying prone at my feet. It was young Gordon, unconscious and bleeding from a blow on the head, and securely tied with a rope. I was still stooping over him, fumbling for another match, when a flashlight shone in my face, fairly blinding me. It played on me for a moment, and then on the boy stretched on the floor and now slightly moving.

"What's happened?" said a voice from behind it, and with relief I recognized it as the doctor's.

"He's hurt," I said, rising dizzily. "Struck on the head, I think."

"Open the door there and turn on the lights. I'll carry him in."

I did as he told me, being still somewhat unsteady, and as he laid the boy on the floor and straightened I was aware that his eyes, as they rested on me, were hostile and suspicious.

Immediately, however, he went to work on the boy, examining him first and then removing the rope.

"He's only stunned," he said, and examined the wound in the scalp carefully. After that he dressed it, the boy by that time moving about and groaning, but still only partially conscious. When the dressing was done the doctor disappeared and returned with a cushion. Keeping the boy supine, he slipped it under his head. Then he straightened.

"You'd better notify the old man," he said. "I'll stay here, if you don't mind."

And from the look he gave me, I gathered that he had no intention of leaving me with the boy.

I made my way upstairs to the room over the den, and knocked for some time before I was heard. Then Mr Bethel called out, startled, and I asked if I could come in. I heard him making heavy work of getting out of bed, and finally he shot the bolt and opening the door an inch or two glared out at me.

"What the devil's the matter?"

"Nothing serious," I said. "There's been a little trouble downstairs, and we thought you'd better be told."

"A fire!"

"Not a fire," I reassured him, and gave him a brief account of what had occurred.

He was not particularly gracious; demanded to know what the boy was doing outside at that hour, and seemed to feel that, with a doctor already in the house, his responsibility was ended. As there was actually nothing he could do, I helped him back to his bed and left him sitting on the side, an unpleasant but helpless figure.

The boy was conscious when I went back to the kitchen, staring around him, and particularly concentrated on the doctor and myself. He put his hand to his head and felt the bandage.

"Where'd I get that?" he asked thickly.

After a time he tried to get up, and the doctor put him into a chair.

"Now, Gordon," he said, "what happened to you? Try and think."

"He hit me," he said finally. "The dirty devil!"

"Who hit you?"

But he was still too dazed for coherent thought. He improved rapidly after that, however, although he complained of severe headache. He became garrulous, too, as happens after concussion, but out of his maunderings we were able to secure a fairly connected story.

He had been unable to sleep, because of certain noises in his room. He had got up, and gone down to the kitchen for something to eat. After that, reluctant to go up to his room again, he had wandered out onto the kitchen steps and sat there. It was then that he heard some one stealthily approaching the house.

He listened, and finally he heard a window of the old gun room next to the laundry being raised. He stared that way, and insists he saw a dark figure there. The next moment it was gone, and he was certain there was some one in the house.

He had, apparently, turned to enter the house and head off the intruder, but was struck down in the doorway. On the matter of ringing the bell he was rather vague at first, not remembering that he had done so, but later saying he had had his hand on the rope, when the blow came.

Hayward listened to this intently. Then he turned to me.

"And you were where, Porter?"

"By the sun-dial. On the other side of it. I had started toward home."

"Do you mean to say that, after that bell rang, this man Gordon speaks of had time to tie him and escape, before you got here?"

"I've told you the facts. It isn't a simple matter to get here from the sun-dial, in the dark."

In spite of the doctor's attitude and my own fears, I cannot see today that a dispassionate examination of the evidence would really involve me.

Gordon saw a man enter the gun room window, and was attacked from the kitchen by that man. It must be perfectly evident to Greenough, on hearing the doctor's story, that had I for any reason desired to make some nefarious entrance into the house, I need not have resorted to a window. I have keys to every door, and can produce them.

Denver Boy is a Winner

Every mother realizes how important it is to teach children good habits of conduct but many of them fail to realize the importance of teaching their children good bowel habits until the poisons from decaying waste held too long in the system have begun to affect the child's health.

Watch your child and at the first sign of constipation, give him a little California Fig Syrup. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it quickly drives away those distressing ailments, such as headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness, feverishness, fretfulness, etc. It gives them a hearty appetite, regulates their stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord. For over fifty years, leading physicians have prescribed it for half-sick, bilious, constipated children. More than 4 million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it.

Mrs. C. G. Wilcox, 3855½ Wolff St., Denver, Colorado, says: "My son, Jackie, is a prize winner for health, now, but we had a lot of trouble with him before we found his trouble was constipation and began giving him California Fig Syrup. It fixed him up quick, gave him a good appetite, made him sleep fine and he's been gaining in weight right along since the first few days, taking it."

To avoid inferior imitations of California Fig Syrup, always look for the word "California" on the carton.

Seeking publicity means that you may have to accept some pretty rough stuff.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Morton College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a gentle and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottle, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. 11, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Positively Last Word About Girl of Today

We knock and criticize her; we scold, apostrophize her, we wish that she was wiser, more dainty and refined; her path we're always stalking to criticize her talking, her clothes, her way of walking, her manners and her mind.

We say, "Oh, highty-tighty! she is frivolous and flighty and all her ways are mighty undignified to see; she joy-rides, flirts and chatters, our old-time rules she shatters and laughs at serious matters with unabated glee!"

We chide and we correct her, we shadow and detect her, we study and dissect her with all her smiles and tears, and find on looking o'er her (and learning to adore her) she's just like girls before her for several thousand years.—Boston Transcript.

High School NOTES

Nine boys receive their Block "S's", and a number of boys receive their circle "S's", as a result of the victory of the Sequoia football team over Jefferson high of San Francisco, which the Cherokees won to the tune of 19-6. The evening following the game, the lightweight basketball teams journeyed to San Mateo to play the Bearcats on their home court, the tens upsetting the dope bucket by winning in a tight game that called for an extra period, and inflicting the first defeat on the San Mateans, while the 20's lost to a close score, again upsetting the dope bucket.

Coach Griffin's casaba tossers will play this Friday evening on the home court, battling South San Francisco. In the previous game with the Windy City lads, the 20's won and the 10's lost.

Five of the Redwood City firemen, under the direction of fire chief Mark Ryan, gave a demonstration of first aid in the handling of unconscious persons, and in the treatment of broken arms and legs, Tuesday, November 15, at Sequoia Union high school.

The demonstration was given before the junior and senior classes, and took place in the gymn. This demonstration is a part of a series of health demonstrations and lectures which will be given to the students of the high school from time to time in the next few weeks.

Kwanis Officials Guests on Peninsula

Two of the international officers of Kiwanis were guests of the San Mateo-Burlingame club at its noon luncheon Tuesday at the Hotel Benj. Franklin in San Mateo. C. O. Cummings, Kansas City, international president and Fred C. Parker, secretary, were greeted by members of Kiwanis clubs of the peninsula.

The two international officers accompanied Frank H. Boren of San Mateo, lieutenant-governor of this district, back from the district convention of California-Nevada district held at Sacramento last week, to visit the peninsula and the San Mateo-Burlingame Club.

McLaren Visits County Seat

John McLaren, the veteran superintendent of Golden Gate Park in San Francisco was at the county tax collector's office on Wednesday, paying taxes on his San Mateo holdings. McLaren is no stranger to the peninsula. Back in the eighties he was the gardener for the late Alvina Hayward and prior to that time he laid out the George Howard estate at San Mateo. For fifteen years he toiled at San Mateo. His ability became known, and Hayward had him appointed superintendent of Golden Gate Park. He made a wonderland of that then barren waste. The park is considered the finest in the United States. McLaren, although up in his eighties is still hale and hearty and fully able to manage the business of caring for the celebrated park.

In the Fall, Too, Ice Is Important

No matter what the thermometer says, you need ice every day in the year, according to Dr. Martha Manning, home refrigeration expert.

"The grocer leaves at the door his basket of fresh vegetables and fruits; the milkman leaves sweet, fresh milk and butter, ice cold—and into the ice box they go—immediately," Dr. Manning states, and adds, "At any rate, they should—and do, in a well-ordered household.

"Wry?

"It is just one of those things the modern housewife does—without thinking much about it. Grandmother, perhaps, did not have ice. She had to put her food in the cellar or window box. Nowadays, ice is plentiful. It is convenient. It is cheap. Everyone can have it, and millions do.

"'Hot weather is not the only time to refrigerate food. Because fall days are cooler is no reason to be without ice for this is the ripening season—when all vegetation enters upon a natural process of decay. Then, too, the weather changes abruptly and nights are much cooler than days. At this period of the year, ice is needed just as much, though it melts less rapidly.

"The battle against spoilage can only be won by constant refrigeration.

The most precious thing about food is its flavor. When food begins to deteriorate, flavor goes first. The best cook in the world cannot prepare a delicious meal with raw ingredients which have started to lose flavor. Preserve flavor with jealous care by keeping food in a well iced box right up to the minute you use it.

"Melting ice causes constant circulation of air in the ice box and this automatically freshens and purifies it. Impurities and odors are deposited on and absorbed by the film of moisture on the ice cake and carried off in the melting.
